

JFK's Close Protection Officers were called back?

If you were asked to terminate the security of your principal, would you? Personally, I would not let myself get send away, because it would endanger the safety of my principal. Is it worth losing your job over? I think so! It is impossible to protect you principal, if there's no security guard walking next to him/her. History tells us that the number of shot down and murdered principals is too high.

It should have been an omen that former US presidents were assassinated. On the day that president Kennedy got shot in Dallas, at least two secret agents were asked to stay away from the presidential limousine. Looking at documentaries about the JFK assassination, a lot of things became very clear to me. According to various secret agents, it is simply not done, to contradict the president. The order for the two secret agents to stay clear of the car did not come from the president, but was given by the secret service agents in the backup car.

The president did not seem bothered by the two agents walking beside the limousine. The question stays... if there were more agents walking beside the car, could the murder have been prevented? Of course, it is naive, to think that JFK would still be alive, but it would have been more difficult to let something like this happen. Too many things have happened and evidence has disappeared, to adopt that this is all about a simple assassination. For example, the murder of Judge Falcone was not planned in just one night. It has taken the mafia years to plan a well organised assassination of this Judge.

We have to take our job very seriously. We must stay highly motivated. We must not leave our principal unprotected, because we get ordered to stay away. It is of life threatening importance that you have a good working relationship with your principal. Especially for the team captain, as he/she is, together with the Commanding Close Protection Officer, the direct link to the principal. A good working relationship can prevent problems like the ones with the JFK assassination, but if a murder could have been prevented is the question.

It is sad to know that these two highly motivated secret service agents were called back, and during the trial, they were asked to be witnesses of the assassination of their principal. Would you still be able to sleep nicely?
